

When it Comes to the Evening

Anne Gregson

When it comes to the evening, and the sun's going down

we can walk by the river walk by the river and sing.

When it comes to the evening

When it comes to the evening and the sun's going down
We can walk by the river, walk by the river and sing.

When the fields turn yellow as the summer grows old
The deep setting sun will turn them to a rich gold.

When you work in the city and the pace gets you down
You can walk by the river that's rolling on down through the town.

And you're never alone, though the world seems unkind
For I will never desert you here in my mind.

When you're needing comfort and a hand to hold
There's always a welcome, a friend at the end of the road.

When the rain pours down and the future's unknown
Just follow the river, follow the river to home.

When it comes to the evening and the sun's going down
We can walk by the river, walk by the river and sing.
